(sent to the 12 MPs who tabled amendments to pt.5 and/or took the opportunity to propose the abolition of the blasphemy law)

25, Middleton Close, Fareham,

> Hants. PO14 1QN 20th November, 2001

Dear

I write on behalf of the Campaign to express our support for your stand against the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Bill.

The Campaign Against Censorship is very strongly opposed to the provisions on 'incitement to religious hatred' in part 5 of the Bill.

Expressing an opinion, no matter how obnoxious, should not be a criminal offence. The proper and effective way to counter hate speech is with information, education, argument and debate, not censorship. Banning an opinion gives it the glamour of the forbidden.

There is a wide gap between the verbal expression of bigotry and its expression in acts of violence. There are already plenty of laws available to deal with violent disorder, arson and assault, regardless of motive. People who are prevented from expressing themselves verbally are more likely to resort to violence, not less.

The existing law on incitement to racial hatred has rarely been used, not least because it is unlikely to result in convictions. The proposed extension to cover religious groups is even more unworkable.

Like nearly all censorship legislation, the proposals have been hastily and badly drafted. They do not even define 'religious belief'.

It is extremely unlikely that the proposed law would be used to prosecute members of mainstream Christian churches. It is much more likely that those charged under it would be of other sects and other faiths. (In the case of Islam, that may even be the intention.) We cannot be sure that groups of believers will not try to use it to silence their own dissidents or ex-members.

The following points are of particular concern:

Clause 38, page 19, line 18 — there is no definition of 'hatred'. In spite of the assurances offered by the Minister, we cannot be sure that ridicule and satire will not be prosecuted.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST CENSORSHIP

continued

Clause 38, page 19, line 19 - refers only to 'groups'. It does not proscribe attacks on individuals. (It would not prohibit an attack on Salman Rushdie for his lack of belief in the Koran.)

Clause 38, page 19, lines 19-20 - there is no definition of 'religious belief' and no definition of 'group'. This lack of definition may lead to attempts by members of existing faiths to silence their opponents and/or their own dissident members and splinter groups.

Clause 38, page 19, lines 21-31 - The clauses in the Public Order Act, 1986 (c.64) - part 3, clauses 17-23 - are heavily dependent on proof of intent. That is, people may be convicted not for the material they publish but for what they think of it. It is wrong to prosecute people for what they think.

Clause 38, page 19, line 31 - Simple possession of any material, no matter how offensive, should not be a criminal offence.

We support complete repeal of the law of blasphemy and blasphemous libel.

from all decrease start volution of the cally offer the reacted all these contents are contents as a content of the content of

Thank you for your attention. Good luck!
Yours.

(Hon. Secretary, CAC)